vote for him and his party in the presidential election next year. The propaganda is already being put out that it is possible to reluce taxes and grant a bonus at the these will have to be paid later and a tax levy must be made to pay average Congressman never looks further ahead than one election. This is the only plausible explanation of the method to be employed for the accomplishment of the pradox of eating the cake and keeping it at the same time.

It is not unlikely that this sort of a situation will develop. Neither is it unlikely that a majority of the people will be deceived by it. People like to be told that they can get something for nothing, although anybody who knows enough to distinguish the difference between daylight and darkness knows that it can't be done. It is like the maiden lady of somewhat advanced years who read in the paper one morning the announcement of her engagement to a duke. "Of ourse, there is not a word of truth in it, but it certainly makes me feel good to read it," she stated.

The bonus advocates are making their drive on the proposition that a bonus will not interfere with tax reductions. They ignore the fundanental proposition of whether the country owes the former service men a bonus as a matter of justice and right. If the country is obligated to grant the bonus, the stion of taxes should not enter into a consideration of the question. If it is a just debt the people ought to pay it. even though it does increase taxes. But the bonus advocates have rather shrewdly pitched ther campaign in such a way as to appeal to the politicians in Congress. If they convince a majority of the Congressmen that taxes can be reduced and a bonus granted by the simple expedient of creating a deficit which will not have to be paid off until after election they will have little difficulty in securug the passage of a bonus bill.

Keeping up the standard of the merchandise is one

Keeping the prices down to the lowest possible notch is another

eager to keep all parties in his constituency satisfied, or at least sufficiently so to induce them to vote for him and his party in the presidential election next year. The propaganda is already being put out that it is possible to reluce taxes and grant a bonus at the same time, but the authors of this kind of propaganda are not very the figures of Mr. Mellon. To the person who thinks, there is but one way open for such a course and Treasury certificates. To be sure these will have to be paid later and a tax levy must be made to pay average Congressman never looks further ahead than one election. This is the only plausible explanation of the method to be employed the accomplishment of the pradox of eating the cake and keeping it at the same time.

It is not unlikely that this sort of a situation will develop. Neither is it unlikely that a majority of the people will be deceived by it. People like to be told that they can get something for nothing, although anybody who knows enough to distinguish the difference between daylight and darkness knows that it can't be done. It is like the maiden lady of somewhat advanced years who read in the paper one morning the announcement of her engagement to a duke. "Of course, there is not a word of truth in it, but it certainly makes me feel good to read it," she stated.

The bonus advocates are making their drive on the proposition that a bonus will not interfere with tax reductions. They ignore the fundamental proposition of whether the country owes the former service and right. If the country is obligated to grant the bonus, the question of taxes should not enter into a consideration of the question. If it is a just debt the people ought to pay it. even though it does increase taxes. But the bonus advocates have rather shrewdly pitched ther campaign in such a way as to appeal to the politicians in Congress. If they convince a majority of the Congressmen that taxes can be reduced and a bonus granted by the simple expedient of creating a deficit which will not have to be paid off until after election they will have little difficulty in securing the passage of a bonus bill.
